I'm Julian from Bullets and Knives, an alternative rock band from Belgium.

Let me introduce you to “The art of dying” the first album of Bullets & Knives.

And it's gonna be simple: “One song every two weeks”.

You will probably wonder why “One song every two weeks” instead of simply just releasing the entire?

The first reason is when you're a famous band, things are clear and defined. “Everyone” is waiting for your new album. You've got a huge promoting machine behind you that allows you to reach a very large audience. You've got your fan base of course but also radios, tv shows, webzines, magazines and then a lot of great gigs to promote your new tracks.

When you're an unknown band, things are getting more complicated and to release an album can be very frustrating. Even if you write songs for yourself, in the end, you need people to listen to them. You need people to feel what you felt while you were writing the songs. That's what music is made for: share emotions!

So I think “one song every two weeks” is a good frequency for you to get into the songs and maybe then to appreciate them.

The second reason of “One song every two weeks” is that in every short video preceding the song itself, I will have time to share with you some anecdotes about it. It will also allow me to deliver some explanations about the lyrics.

If I had to describe “The art of dying”: I will say it's an intense alternative rock album... and I count on you to give me your feedback!

It took me several years to create this with the band and even if it's far to be perfect, I'm proud of it.
